On the Banks of the Mersey

Written by Joan Shaw

This is a story about the good old days.

My father was a bushman and a mill man.

That was the type of work
my father did for a living,
as he loved the bush life.

He used to trap rabbits for a living, and kangaroos and wallabies, and sold the skins as they got good money for them.

He used to own the little farm where we lived.

We used to milk cows by hand.

We made our own butter.

We got milk and cream
from the farm as well.

We had chooks and ducks and pigs.

Mum and dad used to have bacon and pork and ham, which was very lovely to eat.

We used to go fishing in the Mersey River.

We caught black fish, brown trout, rainbow trout and eels.

When I caught an eel, I cut my line and let it go.

These were good times, but things are not the same these days.

25 Stories

Written by learners and published as a resource for others to share on their learning journeys

During the late 1980s and early 1990s, the Adult Literacy and Basic Education (ALBE) Resources Unit in Devonport, Tasmania, published over 50 stories that had been written by learners as part of their literacy learning program. The writers were closely involved in the production of their stories, with the understanding that the resources would be made available for other learners, teachers and tutors. Since their initial publication there has been continuing interest in the stories, that contain relevant content and appropriate reading levels for adult learners. They are widely used by individuals and organisations across Australia as reading resources and as models for writing.

25 Stories is a selection of those works that have been republished and made available to download, free of charge from the Tasmanian Council for Adult Literacy (TCAL) website, www.tcal.org.au. Each story has been assigned an Australian Core Skills Framework (ACSF) level for reading and writing.

TasTAFE and TCAL wish to thank the original writers, illustrators, learners, teachers and publishers who have generously made these stories available for others to share.
